Palestine Needs Another Solomon

No problem facing the world is so difficult as Palestine. In no other case is it so difficult to define, let alone to achieve, complete justice to all.

At least three principal interests are tangled in this historic land: 1. That of the great majority of inhabitants, the Arabs; 2. That of the Jewish immigrants, eyes shining with the hope of a Jewish homeland and a Jewish state; and 3. That of the British imperial system, which pledged loyalty to both the Jews and Arabs, and which conceives it necessary to empire defense to have Palestine in friendly hands.

The Balfour Declaration of 1917, which made the "Jewish homeland" an allied war aim, was a political move. Lloyd George admits that at least the timing of the declaration was "determined by considerations of war policy. It was part of our propagandist strategy for mobilizing every portion and force throughout the world which would weaken the enemy and improve the allied chances."

A sense it was also the payment of a debt, a personal debt to Dr. Chaim Weizmann, whose chivalric skill had saved the British from a threatening shortage of cordite. The Germans, too, had toyed with the idea of promising a Jewish concession in Palestine, but the British beat them to it.

From the first, and even today, there has been a certain indefiniteness about the Palestine aim. Was "Jewish homeland" to mean merely a symbolic seat where Jewish culture might flourish and develop undisturbed, or an actually sovereign and political Jewish state? The thought seems to have been to begin with the first and gradually merge into the second if population growth and progress justified it.

But since Palestine, and especially Jerusalem, are holy ground not only to Jews, but the Christians and Mohammedans, it was clearly held in mind at all times that the "Holy Places" must be kept available to all and the rights of Arab and Christian as well as Jew preserved.

President Wilson spoke of a "Jewish commonwealth" in Palestine, and the mandate might even have been given to America instead of Britain except that it was generally felt the American people would not accept it.

The League of Nations mandate went to the British. They have administered the actual government of the country, while Jews, aided by Zionist movements all over the world, have been building it up economically. The Arabs, meanwhile, watched apprehensively the growth of Jewish population, the building of Jewish cities and industries, foreseeing a day when Jewish predominance might threaten their position.

Repeated studies, commissions, investigations, reports, have sought a permanent allotment of those conflicting interests.

Always in the background have been British imperial interests as well, the World War obligations to the Arabs as allies, the position of Palestine near Suez and Egypt, the necessity of not alienating the Mohammedan world.

Into this welter of conflicting interests the latest proposal of the British "White Paper" has been flung, with little augury of success. Truly a 20th-century Solomon might be sorely puzzled to deal even-handed justice to all today in troubled Palestine.

Here Are More Questions to Test Your Knowledge of Health

Last week there were five questions about health which you tried to answer. For every one that you answer right you give yourself a credit of 20 points. If you are well-informed you can get 100, but if you get 60 you can consider yourself reasonably well-informed. If your mark is less than 60 you really ought to try to learn more about your body and its care.

Here are five more questions on which to test yourself:

1. The air we breathe is important to health because: (a) it contains oxygen; (b) it is full of iron; (c) it dilutes our pores; (d) it cools us off; (e) it kills germs.

2. If you get a cinder in your eye you should: (a) rub it with a gold ring; (b) press your upper lip with your finger; (c) rub the other eye; (d) wash it with boric acid; (e) ask a friend to scrape it out with a knife blade.

3. The way to get a good doctor is: (a) join a lodge; (b) ask your neighbor; (c) call the health department; (d) ask the medical society; (e) pick the one on the corner with the big electric sign.

4. People should take plenty of exercise because: (a) big muscles are healthy; (b) exercise makes you live longer; (c) exercise makes you eat more; (d) exercise makes you feel better; (e) exercise raises your blood pressure.

5. People have goiters or swellings in the neck because: (a) they eat too much salt; (b) their mothers saw giraffes at the circus; (c) they wear too tight collars; (d) they live in North Carolina; (e) they get no iodine in their food.

Answers:

1. Oxygen is the vital element in the blood takes it up and carries it to the tissues that require it.

2. To remove a cinder first try dropping a little boric acid solution in the eye, or if this is not available, clean water. If the result is not satisfactory have the cinder removed by someone who has had experience and who will wash his hands thoroughly with soap and water before trying. A soft wisp of cotton or the edge of an absolutely clean handkerchief should be employed.

If you must rub something, rub the other eye.

3. More than 113,000 doctors now belong to the medical societies. If you do not have a family doctor in whom you have confidence, ask the secretary of the medical society in your town or county to recommend one to you.

4. Exercise stimulates the circulation of the blood and the action of the tissues and makes you feel better. Big muscles are not an asset to health.

5. Simple goiters are usually due to lack of sufficient iodine in the diet of the growing child. The use of iodized salt on the table or preferably the regular administration of small doses of iodine prescribed by a doctor will prevent simple goiters in areas in which there is insufficient iodine in the soil.

STORIES IN STAMPS

Atlantic Flying Begins After 20 Years' Trials

SYMBOL of a gallant, daring era is the new U. S. special Trans-Atlantic airmail stamp shown above, blue, slightly reduced. Twenty years after the first heavier-than-air flights across the Atlantic it is being used for official postage to inaugurate regular crossings between America and the old world. Thereby tags an epic story.

It is a story that begins in the twilight of a May evening in 1919, May 16 to be exact, when three powerful ships of the U. S. Navy, rose from American waters to begin the first heavier-than-air flying of the Atlantic. They were headed for the Azores, 1200 miles distant, the same route followed by the pilots of Pan American Airways today. But fog and storm and disaster set in soon after the takeoff and only one ship, the NC-4, successfully completed the first leg. The others were forced down without loss of lives.

From the Azores the NC-4 took off again after a week's layover and flew successfully to Lisbon, and from there later on to Plymouth, where the first flight officially ended amid high celebration May 31, 1919.

So began Trans-Atlantic aviation, in an open cockpit, with comparatively crude instruments, but with great daring. And eight years later came unknown Charles Lindbergh to dramatize the possibilities of oceanic flying for all time. And after him came others, equally intrepid. Meantime, the great research laboratories of the nation were trained on the problem of aircraft development, safer flying, commercial operation. Now, 20 years after the first flight, regularly scheduled crossings from New York to Marseille, by way of the Azores and Lisbon, Portugal and return are underway. Aviation has soared to another conquest!

DATE WITH DANGER

BY HELEN WORDEN
COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

Yesterday, Mary Franklin states Duke Martin to keep hands off Clem Shirley. After the French general he writes "Ifa Justice French's secret been buried with her!"

CHAPTER XX

THAT night Clem Shirley was standing at the bar of the Dove with Jack Burden when Duke Martin walked in. He saw that Jack, half-drunk, was arguing with Clem.

Instead of speaking to them, the Duke silently pulled out a chair at a table in a far corner, quietly told a waiter to bring him a drink, then settled down to watch the pair at the bar, a dark look on his saturnine face.

Clem was drinking a highball. Her black hair was tumbling in careless curls about a defiant face and the strap of a scarlet evening gown had already slipped off one shoulder.

Her voice was high-pitched and reckless as she replied to Jack's pleading tones.

His face was flushed, his hair wrinkled, and his dinner coat wrinkled. Half-drunk, he was making a desperate effort to hold her attention. Occasionally curled eyes strayed in their direction, but the crowd which frequented the tap room of the Dove was accustomed to scenes of this sort. As a rule it tolerated them with bored indifference and objected only when the principals grew noisy.

"You don't care a damn!" Jack's words, tense and deep, suddenly penetrated the haze of barroom chatter.

A woman laughed shrilly. "He's off again. Why doesn't he come over here? She isn't the only girl in the world."

Another woman sitting at the same table tuttered. "The idiot was going to marry her. She's thrown him over for Duke Martin. Caught in the mesh, I'd say."

The first woman sniffed. "She's more scatterbrained than I thought. Look where Janice French landed."

A fresh lot of people came in and their conversation was lost again in the babble of noisy tongues.

JACK staided himself at the bar as he ordered another drink. His handsome face was drawn and in his blood-shot eyes was a harassed, desperate look.

"You're a silly little fool heading straight for the devil," he said. Then reaching for the glass the bartender handed him, he added, "And I'm going with you."

"Don't talk rot," she said sulkily. "I don't want you policing me. You don't own me." Her voice grew hysterical. "I don't see what I ever saw in you—such a prig!"

"A prig because I object to your going with Martin when you know he's a crook. A prig because I don't like the pretty drinks he concocts for little girls." His voice broke. "My God, Clem. Can't you see it's only because I love you that I'm talking this way?"

As Jack's words again rang out through the room, Martin left his table and walked slowly across to the bar.

"Sorry to interrupt," he drawled, "but I thought we had a date to-night, Clem."

Like a little slave, Clem put down her drink and turned to go with him.

Jack, white with anger, faced Martin. "You can't take my girl." There was a flicker of amusement in the Duke's eyes. "She wants to go."

Jack's right fist clutched convulsively, then trembled. "Perhaps you would like my money as well." He reached in his pocket. "I'll buy her back. How much is she worth?" He flung a roll of bills on the bar.

"You're acting like a fool, Burden. Put that money back in your pocket."

Spitting with rage, Jack struck out at Martin, fanning the air as the Duke side-stepped his fist.

Clem stepped between the two men, her eyes were cold and hostile. "I never want to see you again, Jack Burden," she cried. "You're—you're unspeakable!"

Martin caught her by the arm, his lowering face red and dark. "Come on, Clem." But before he could turn, Jack had swung again and this time he landed a neat one on Martin's chin. The owner of the Dove reeled slightly. "Don't be such a sap," he warned, shoving Jack into a chair. "Clear out and come back when you're sober."

"I'll clear out when I damned well get ready," shouted Jack.

THE little group at the bar had everybody's attention. The head waiter rushed excitedly forward, a couple sitting near Martin and Jack moved to a far table and Nick came hurrying through the door.

"You lounge," he cried, grabbing Jack by his shoulder. "So you thought you could strong arm the boss!"

With cold brutality Martin walked out. Clem followed him. People returned to their tables. The tap room again hummed with chatter.

"Take a drink to clear your head," Nick advised, nodding to the bartender to pour Jack a stiff one.

Feigning to reach for the drink, Jack swung at Nick's head instead.

Here Are More Questions to Test Your Knowledge of Health

Last week there were five questions about health which you tried to answer. For every one that you answered right you give yourself a credit of 20 points. If you are well-informed you can get 100, but if you get 60 you can consider yourself remarkably well-informed. If your mark is less than 60 you really ought to try to learn more about your body and its care.

Here are five more questions on which to test yourself:

1. The air we breathe is important to health because: (a) it contains oxygen; (b) it is full of iron; (c) it dilates our pores; (d) it cools us off; (e) it kills germs.
2. If you get a cinder in your eye you should: (a) rub it with a gold ring; (b) press your upper lip with your finger; (c) rub the other eye; (d) wash it with boric acid; (e) ask a friend to scrape it out with a knife blade.
3. The way to get a good doctor is: (a) join a lodge; (b) ask your neighbor; (c) call the health department; (d) ask the medical society; (e) pick the one on the corner with the big electric sign.

4. People should take plenty of exercise because: (a) big muscles are healthy; (b) exercise makes you live longer; (c) exercise makes you eat more; (d) exercise makes you feel better; (e) exercise raises your blood pressure.

5. People have goiters or swellings in the neck because: (a) they eat too much salt; (b) their mothers saw giraffes at the circus; (c) they wear too tight collars; (d) they live in North Carolina; (e) they get no iodine in their food.

Answers:
1. Oxygen is the vital element in air. The blood takes it up and carries it to the tissues that require it.
2. To remove a cinder first try dropping a little boric acid solution in the eye, or if this is not available, clean water. If the result is not satisfactory have the cinder removed by someone who has had experience and who will wash his hands thoroughly with soap and water before trying. A soft wisp of cotton or the edge of an absolutely clean handkerchief should be employed. If you must rub something, rub the other eye.
3. More than 113,000 doctors now belong to the medical societies. If you do not have a family doctor in whom you have confidence, ask the secretary of the medical society in your town or county to recommend one to you.
4. Exercise stimulates the circulation of the blood and the action of the tissues and makes you feel better. Big muscles are not an asset to health.
5. Simple goiters are usually due to lack of sufficient iodine in the diet of the growing child. The use of iodized salt on the table or preferably the regular administration of small doses of iodine prescribed by a doctor will prevent simple goiters in areas in which there is insufficient iodine in the soil.

End of School Year

The little dresses that were new and bright when school began, are drilled and mended now. And skirts that touched the knees last fall, somehow reveal an inch of thigh, an inch of height. Incredibly added on since Labor Day. And childish hands, no longer cramped and tight. Around the pencil, know the way to write. Now words are things to spell, as well as say. The final apron string is cut at last. They know that life is lived by book and rule. That spring is gone and babyhood is just. These veterans in the mysteries of school. No longer shy, bewildered or afraid.

DATE WITH DANGER

BY HELEN WORDEN

COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

Yesterday, Mary Franklin was Duke Martin's date. After the French funeral she visited the French cemetery and buried her secret with her.

CHAPTER XX

THAT night Clem Shirley was standing at the bar of the Dove with Jack Burden when Duke Martin walked in. He saw that Jack, half-drunk, was arguing with Clem.

Instead of speaking to them, the Duke silently pulled out a chair at a table in a far corner, quietly told a waiter to bring him a drink, then settled down to watch the pair at the bar, a dark look on his saturnine face.

Clem was drinking a highball. Her black hair was tumbling in careless curls about a defiant face and the strap of a scarlet evening gown had already slipped off one shoulder.

Her voice was high-pitched and reckless as she replied to Jack's pleading tones.

His face was flushed, his hair rumpled, and his dinner coat wrinkled. Half-drunk, he was making a desperate effort to hold her attention. Occasionally curious eyes strayed in their direction, but the crowd which frequented the tap room of the Dove was accustomed to scenes of this sort.

As a rule it tolerated them with bored indifference and objected only when the principals grew noisy.

"You don't care a damn!" Jack's words, tense and deep, suddenly penetrated the haze of barroom chatter.

A woman laughed shrilly. "He's off again. Why doesn't he come over here? She isn't the only girl in the world."

Another woman sitting at the same table tilted. "The idiot was going to marry her. She's thrown him over for Duke Martin. Caught in the mesh, I'd say."

The first woman sniffed. "She's more scatterbrained than I thought. Look where Janice French landed."

A fresh lot of people came in and their conversation was lost again in the babble of noisy tongues.

JACK steadied himself at the bar as he ordered another drink. His handsome face was drawn and in his blood-shot eyes was a harassed, desperate look.

"You're a silly little fool heading straight for the devil," he said. Then reaching for the glass the bartender handed him, he added, "And I'm going with you."

"Don't talk rot," she said sulkily. "I don't want you policing me. You don't own me." Her voice grew hysterical. "I don't see what I ever saw in you—such a prig!"

"A prig because I object to your going with Martin when you know he's a crook. A prig because I don't like the pretty drinks he concocts for little girls." His voice broke. "My God, Clem. Can't you see it's only because I love you that I'm talking this way?"

As Jack's words again rang out through the room, Martin left his table and walked slowly across to the bar.

"Sorry to interrupt," he drawled, "but I thought we had a date tonight, Clem."

Like a little slave, Clem put down her drink and turned to go with him.

Jack, white with anger, faced Martin. "You can't take my girl."

There was a flicker of amusement in the Duke's eyes. "She wants to go."

Jack's right fist clutched convulsively, then trembled. "Perhaps you would like my money as well." He reached in his pocket. "I'll buy her back. How much is she worth?" He flung a roll of bills on the bar.

"You're acting like a fool, Burden. Put that money back in your pocket."

Spitting with rage, Jack struck out at Martin, fanning the air as the Duke side-stepped his fist.

Clem stepped between the two men, her eyes were cold and hostile. "I never want to see you again, Jack Burden," she cried. "You're—you're unspeakable!"

Martin caught her by the arm, his lowering face red and dark. "Come on, Clem." But before he could turn, Jack had swung again and this time he landed a neat one on Martin's chin. The owner of the Dove reeled slightly. "Don't be such a sap," he warned, shoving Jack into a chair. "Clear out and come back when you're sober."

"I'll clear out when I damned well get ready," shouted Jack.

THE little group at the bar had everybody's attention. The head waiter rushed excitedly forward, a couple sitting near Martin and Jack moved to a far table and Nick came hurrying through the door.

"You louse," he cried, grabbing Jack by his shoulder. "So you thought you could strong arm the boss!"

With cold brutality Martin walked out. Clem followed him. People returned to their tables. The tap room again hummed with chatter.

"Take a drink to clear your head," Nick advised, nodding to the bartender to pour Jack a stiff one.

Feigning to reach for the drink, Jack swung at Nick's head instead.

sending him spinning like a billiard ball among the tables. Before the crowd could grasp exactly what had happened, or before Nick could recover, Jack had drained the glass of whisky, hurled it at the head of an advancing and menacing waiter and bolted for the door.

Still running, he bumped hard into Mary Franklin, just as she was stepping into the main entrance.

When he didn't stop to apologize she stared after him. He stood on the curb in front of his automobile, swaying unsteadily as he tried to unlock the car door.

Mary rushed toward him as he stumbled in.

"Jack, she cried, attempting to grab the car door. 'What is the trouble?' He banged the car door shut. Mary was thrown backward on the pavement. His only reply was a screeching of the tires as he swung the car out into the middle of the street and careened wildly off.

QUICKLY picking herself up, Mary shouted at a taxi whirling by. Climbing excitedly in she called to the driver, "Follow that blue coupe!"

The taxi man nodded. Jack's car was already turning up Third Avenue.

A shifting of the brakes threw Mary forward as her taxi jerked to a stop.

"Go on," she cried, "can't you see we're already losing track of that blue car?"

But the driver didn't answer. A policeman had thrust a grim face into the front of the taxi. "Where's the first? Let's see your license."

"You can't stop this cab," Mary spoke sharply. "I'm on the Gazette." She reached in her bag. "Here is my police card."

"Just a minute, sister, just a minute." The officer held up a warning hand. "I ain't got no quarrel with you, but I will have if you keep this up. Show your police card to the commissioner, not me. This bozo was breaking the traffic laws and he's going to get a ticket or worse."

"You fool," cried Mary. "I'm on a story that the commissioner cares a lot about."

"Another word, young lady, and you'll go to the hoosegow with this guy."

A crowd was gathering, attracted by the argument. The cab driver maintained a discreet silence.

"Here, take this." Desperately Mary flung a five dollar bill at the driver and jumped out of the car. "That'll cover your fine," she called and started running up Third Avenue looking frantically for another cab.

NASHVILLE, Ark.—The new board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce held its organization meeting and electing as the new president, Rex Ramsey, financier, and Henry Ferguson of the Nashville News vice president. Glenn F. Wallace has been president for the past 12 months.

Plans were made for the annual membership drive. J. N. Nichols, Rex Ramsey, Henry Ferguson and L. C. Honeycutt were elected as chairman of committee on wholesalers, fruit growers, professional men and business respectively. Plans were made for purchasing additional instruments for the high school band and giving it further financial assistance.

Dairying, poultry, fruit growing, highway improvement, streets, civic improvement programs, marketing problems, live stock raising, are some of the items in the next year's program of activities. Harvesting and marketing the great peach crop which has just started to move, and which will be more than 350,000, present the first problems to be solved.

Achieving that tailored look is the despair of many housewives who spend long hours at the sewing machine in the interests of the family clothing budget.

The secret of producing a frock that does not proclaim "loving hands at home" can often be traced to such apparently minor considerations as the size of needles and thread, according to Miss Sue Marshall, extension specialist in clothing and household arts, University of Arkansas College of Agriculture.

As a matter of fact the selection of needles and thread is not a minor consideration at all, but is just as important in doing perfect work as suitable cloth and patterns, Miss Marshall says.

There is a correct size of needle and thread for every weight of fabric, declares the clothing specialist in offering the following advice concerning the selection of these two important sewing materials.

Needles that are too coarse make it impossible to adjust tensions on the machine to do neat work. Coarse sewing needles make it impossible to take tiny stitches that are invisible when doing hand work.

WM. R. MOORE'S
MEMPHIS

Comfortably curled up on one of the sets for "The Cat and the Canary," Paulette Goddard listens intently to story directions from Director Arthur Hornblow, Jr. Even in a relaxed moment between scenes, Miss Goddard's striking beauty reveals itself.

The size of thread for sewing should be the same as a thread raveled from the fabric itself. Thread of this size will stitch into the fabric and be barely invisible.

Fabrics with a dull finish, such as silk crepe or woolen fabrics, are top stitched with dull finished mercerized thread. Inside seams may be stitched with silk for added strength, if desired. Fabrics with a high sheen, such as satin and broadcloth, are top stitched with silk thread. Inside seams may be stitched with silk or mercerized thread.

Fine fabrics, such as organdie, batiste, chiffon and georgette, are stitched with number 100 colored thread called "sheer fabric thread" using a #1 machine needle and the machine adjusted to make 20 stitches to the inch. Use number nine needles for hand sewing.

Such fabrics as percale, cambric, gingham, cotton prints, and household cottons, light weight wools, and heavy dress silks are stitched with size 50 to 70 thread, or colored mercerized sewing thread. Medium sized sewing needles are used and the machine adjusted to make 14 stitches to the inch. Number six to eight needles are used for hand sewing on these fabrics.

Nashville Prepares for Peach Harvest

Huge Crop Expected to Be Gathered Within 60-
Day Period

NASHVILLE, Ark.—Nashville is making studied and definite preparations for a big peach crop this year. Such evidence can be seen on every hand. Hundreds of thousands of containers and baskets are arriving, for it requires more than 100 freight car loads of empty baskets to package this great crop. There is a noticeable increase in activity in the yards of the three railroads that serve this city. Switch engines are shunting a growing number of cars about daily.

An ice plant here has been running at capacity for many months storing up thousands of tons of ice so as to be prepared to ice more than three thousand car loads of peaches to be harvested here within the next 60 days. Reserve stocks of empty baskets are

Comely Anna Neagle Is "Research Shark" on Her Own Pictures

HOLLYWOOD.—Anna Neagle is the only actress who does the research for her own pictures. Judging by her enthusiasm for the next one, "Nurse Edith Cavell," it seems like a good idea, and her industry should stand as a mild reproach to the many players who begin a production with only the foggiest notion of the characters they're supposed to portray.

Fortunately this English star, famous for her historical roles, likes history. She dug out all the information for the screen play of "Victoria the Great," which she then helped translate into a celluloid document by impersonating the queen between the ages of 18 and 81. More recently she appeared in another Victorian film, "Sixty Glorious Years," which so far has grossed $1,600,000 in the empire but hasn't been released in this country. It is to be shown here, under the title of "Queen of Destiny," after Miss Neagle becomes better known to American audiences through the drama of Edith Cavell.

Producer Herbert Wilcox and his star came over here a few months ago with the idea of making a hoisterous flicker about the life of the late (1922) Marie Lloyd. In New York, Movie Critic William Boehnel told Wilcox that America knew little and cared less about Actress Lloyd, and that the producer might better do the story of the martyred Cavell, whom he once had dealt with in a silent film.

Has Cavell's Own Bible

Wilcox and Miss Neagle decided so, too, and the latter has been up to her ears in books, government reports and personal letters dealing with the Cavell activities and execution in Belgium. She even has Miss Cavell's Bible containing the owner's stark entries during those mid-October days of 1915 when every nation and many a high German official was trying to save her life.

When Wilcox's silent film about Edith Cavell was finished in 1929 it was widely banned at the request of the German government. Warner Brothers, today the most bitter Hitler-haters, was one of the companies that refused to release it in America.

But this picture is not going to be anti-German, said Miss Neagle and Wilcox, supplementing each other's assurances. More than anything, she said, it is a straightforward, factual recounting of a great human drama.

According to a published list of rules for table behavior in colonial times, colonial children were not allowed to ask for anything at the table, nor speak unless first spoken to, nor bite into a whole slice of bread.

Deanna Dines

Deanna Durbin's also growing up, like all of the more prominent younger stars. Here she is in her latest informal picture, snapped at the Coconut Grove opening with young Vaughn Paul, studio assistant director.

Pendergast Appointees
Are Under Fire at K. C.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—More pressure was turned on the city hall by the Forward Kansas City Committee in its demand for a government clean-up here.

It drafted a letter, which will be presented to Mayor Bryce D. Smith specifying personnel changes believed necessary by the committee. Committee members declined to discuss the letter or reveal its contents but word leaked out that it was aimed to eliminate from public office persons aligned with Tom Pendergast's political organization.

Indecision was reported at the city hall and rumors were that the jobs of William J. Tefkey, purchasing agent; Fred. Bellenger, city counselor; Jerry Ryth, welfare director, and Prebail Hall, personnel director, hung in the balance.

Dr. Carl E. Buck, field director of the American Public Health Association, charged the city's Health Department still is under the influence of Pendergast's political machine although the boss is in Leavenworth penitentiary serving 15 months for income tax evasion.

When Rome Had A New Deal

H. J. Haskell, editor, Kansas City Star, has written a startling comparison of governmental reform measures in modern America and ancient Rome. Typical of the inadequate. (She became a stal almost immediately.)

"It always makes me laugh to hear picture people grumbling about their hard lives, when they're doing such interesting things and earning 10 times more than anybody else. Even if it is a strain, and all that, I don't mind having been lifted out of the rut. I'd probably have been a shopgirl by now."
